

I wish to go on record as opposing the DoT's attempt to evade full disclosure of information gleaned on airline passengers. Exempting such data collection from the provisions of The Privacy Act of 1974 is clearly a mockery of the intent of the act. The historic abuses of such invasions of privacy are legion, and the very least compensation for your stalking me should be access to the data you store about me.